Comment :

1. Major Stane Gunder, 40, born in Ljubljana and a clerk by profession, was known before the war as a left-wing sympathizer but joined the Partisans only in late 1942 and a year later, the Communist Party of Slovenia. His war-time service was that of a supply officer of 9 Partisan Corps operating in the Trieste area, with a later promotion to the rank of Captain.
2. After the war he became a major in the Yugoslav Army on duty in Trieste, and a member of the Yugoslav Military Mission, serving as supply officer and Chief of the Passports Section. He is a personal friend of Lieutenant General Dusan Kveder, (who sent him to a special training school in the Soviet Union for six months) and Major General Vlado Pehacek.

3. For the past two years he has been active as a liaison officer between the Trieste Communist Party and the Yugoslav Army, and in UDB work. He travels between Trieste and Koper on military and political business, and his membership in the Yugoslav economic mission is probably a cover for his real work.
4. His extremely pro-Tito reputation has resulted in an important position in the Communist Party. He is of medium intelligence and has great ambition and energy. He has excellent connections in both Ljubljana and Trieste. His wife's home is in Trieste and she is of considerable political assistance to him, although their personal relationship is not good. He seems to have plenty of money and appreciates a life of luxury. He speaks fluent Italian and German and a little Russian. On 19 October 1948, he was reported to be in Trieste, where he always appears in civilian dress.
